Abstract

Son to one of the original Plymouth families, George Starkweather built a dry goods store on what was the southeast corner of Liberty Street and Oak Street, facing Kellogg Park. This store was a partnership with R.G. Hall. Even though the partnership dissolved in 1870, Starkweather continued to operate the store until 1901. Convinced that a railroad would bring commercial traffic to Plymouth, George added the Oak Street North road through his property to bring traffic to his store and to the train station. George Stark weather played an active in Plymouth civil life and died in 1907.
